Archival Selection Guidelines

This document provides information about which records should be considered for transfer to the GSA's Archives. Any material moved to the Archives will be preserved for long-term retention. Access to material less than 30 years will only be granted in consultation with the Head of the originating department. Please contact the Archives & Collections service for further advice: email archives@gsa.ac.uk or call 0141 566 1418.

1. Background

The GSA Archives are amongst the most comprehensive and long-standing of any UK Art School. It is important to maintain the ongoing value of this resource for scholarship and for the GSA itself, by continuing to transfer relevant records from Schools and Departments to the Archives in a planned and timely manner. Records selected for transfer to the Archives will be of continuing value to the GSA, providing its 'corporate memory' for historical and research purposes, whilst also continuing to support current business needs.

It is vital that early decisions are made about which records constitute those of archival significance. In order to do this, the contents of GSA's records should be assessed to establish which provide the best evidence of the GSA's different functions (irrespective of their format). GSA's core functions can be summarised as:

- Delivery of, and support for, learning, teaching and research
- Governance or corporate management via the Board of Governors and the Academic Council and their sub-committees
- Asset management (such as staff, buildings and finance), including strategy development and delivery, management accounts, staff training and HR policies
- External relations management: the promotion of courses, degree shows and services for external stakeholders, catalogues of holdings, exhibition and event documentation

Records relating to these functions which are of archival significance should provide core information about:

- what the GSA did
- when, where and how it did it
- why it did it in a particular way
- who were the key staff involved, and why
- what impact did it have, and who was affected by it.

2. The archival selection process

Archival selection is based on assessing which records provide the best evidence of the GSA's key activities. For many activities it will not be necessary to preserve all of the records created by that activity, in order to have adequate documentation of it. Some records will provide better evidence of the activity than others, and selection will be determined by the content of the record, rather than by its format.

The Archivist will work closely with the Institutional Repository and Records Manager, and with records creators within the GSA's Schools and Departments, to ensure that selection decisions about what material should be transferred to the Archives are reached in a mutually agreed and transparent way. These decisions will be recorded in the GSA's records retention schedules (RRSs). For further information on RRSs, please refer to the GSA Records Management web page: <http://www.gsa.ac.uk/about-gsa/key-information/records-management/>

Many records are not easily identifiable, and at first sight their archival value may not be apparent. For example, files with a general title such as "Projects" may cover a wide range of material. They may need to be reviewed by the GSA's Archivist, and the advice of appropriate members of staff may also be sought.

3. Key GSA records for archival selection

The following tables set out the GSA's key activities, and indicate the associated records which should be reviewed for transfer to the GSA Archives. These tables are not yet finalised and require consultation with the relevant records creators within the GSA's Schools and Departments.

Please note: in addition to the specific records listed in the tables below, the following types of documents should also be considered for archival value:

- agendas and minutes for all committees, management groups and project groups
- policy documents (current and superseded)
- operational plans
- codes of practice.
